Colorado's Family Resource Center Program

Mission & Description

The Family Resource Center Program, established in 1993, C.R.S. 26-18-104, is a public-private initiative created to address gaps in the delivery of essential human services in communities across Colorado. The program is designed to coordinate existing programs/services, implement new family support programs if none exist, and serve as a single point of entry for comprehensive, integrated state and community-based services to vulnerable families and children.

- Family Resource Centers utilize a comprehensive and proven community-based approach to improving health, social, educational, and economic outcomes for entire families, not just individuals.
- Working as a catalyst within high-risk communities, each center tailors programs to fill service gaps without duplicating services--providing access to existing resources and offering vital services in response to specific community needs.
- Family support and case management services address the needs of the whole family, stressing prevention, independence and self-sufficiency as families define and fulfill their own aspirations.
- Programs build on family strengths while respecting beliefs, values, customs, cultures, and community identity.

Program Management History

The Program was initially located in the Colorado Department of Human Services and subsequently transferred to the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment in 2000.

The Family Resource Center Association (FRCA), a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization, was founded in 1998 as a statewide strategic alliance that supports and enhances family resource centers.

- 24 stand-alone centers collaborate through FRCA to strengthen programs and service delivery through statewide advocacy and outreach, capacity-building training and technical assistance, joint programming and evaluation, and resource development.
- Statewide collaboration enables member centers to improve on a time-tested, community-based approach with evidence-based and innovative best practices in family strengthening.
- Greater than the sum of its parts, FRCA provides a powerful safety net of community-based programs on behalf of vulnerable families and individuals across Colorado.
