The "up side" is that the amount of redundant paperwork would be eliminated. The "down side" is that student tuition would go up, making it more difficult for some to take a class. There might be a decrease in student enrollment, but I don't think it would be overly detrimental to any of the vendors.

I don't know? I can continue to teach just as well without the gov't but my understanding this type of program is mandated to have formal oversight in order to grant endorsements.

There'd be a lot less frickin paper work, and it would be harder to make ends meet financially.

8/20/2013 4:32 PM View respondent's answers

It would have zero effect.

8/19/2013 11:27 PM View respondent's answers

I don't feel it would. There is no Q&A conducted now so what would we really be losing?

Have board members who ride and have taught safety classes to represent the vendors. It is easier to make decisions based on what you know, not what you hear. Have a board leader that is not associated with CDOT Get rid of all the bureaucracy that makes it so difficult for Emiliano to accomplish the things that his job entails. Trust him to make decisions based on his knowledge of what is best for those he serves.

Shutting it down would be the best thing to do at this point in time.
