ONE DAY...

...We will have created a reality in which long term care is seen as a community responsibility and a valued part of the health care continuum, with financial and social programs for all in need. These programs will allow for community-based care, household models, private rooms, beautiful environments and amenities available to all. The image of long term care will be positive and people will want to work there because they are respected and well-paid. People will desire to live in these communities without the need for regulations or fear of uncertainty."

Who We Are

CCCC is a nonprofit organization dedicated to transforming care. It exists to enhance the quality of life for residents living in Colorado's nursing homes and assisted living communities, and does so by fostering the individualization of resident care and the appreciation of the uniqueness of each individual. CCCC also promotes the values, innovative models, outcomes measurement, and leadership practices of culture change through education and support of culture change initiatives across the state. CCCC is known nationally not only as an expert in culture change, but as a leader and innovator in the field.

CCCC is also a community of dedicated individuals, including Elders and others residing in homes, families, advocates, long-term care providers, long-term care ombudsmen, regulators, and health care professionals, committed to transforming the culture of the long term care continuum.

What Is Culture Change?

Culture Change transforms philosophy and practice at every level of operation instead of adding new routines on top of old practices and approaches. It is not change for its own sake. It is about changing to a new way of working that fosters an environment in which staff are inspired to support residents' quality of life and self-determination and to respect residents' dignity, personhood, and autonomy.

Culture Change Action

- Person centered or person directed care.
- Decision making returned to residents.
- Flexibility in set routines and schedules.
- Increased decision making given to direct care staff.
- Strong support of direct care staff; i.e. career ladders and leadership positions.
- Consistent staff assignments in order to learn residents' routines and needs.
- Resident choice in time of getting up and going to bed.
- Buffer, restaurant, and/or family style dining giving resident choice of meals and meal times.
- Warm, relaxing and inviting bathing rooms.
- Welcoming resident animals and birds for companionship.
- An abundance of living plants inside and landscaping and foliage outside.
- Integrating the presence of children in daily life.
- Gathering a community to discuss things of mutual interest and concern, to celebrate, to remember, and to mourn.
- Self directed teams, flattened management.
- Small units of residents made into neighborhoods and households.
- Country kitchen areas on each neighborhood/household.
- Dining and sitting areas clustered around neighborhoods kitchens.
- Personal laundry done on each neighborhood/household.
