Summary of Legislation

The bill adds near fatalities and incidents of egregious abuse or neglect to the types of incidents to be investigated by the Child Fatality Review Team (review team) in the Department of Human Services (DHS). County departments of human services are required to report suspicious near fatalities and other egregious incidents to the DHS.

Under current law, the review team only examines the circumstances of cases involving a child fatality. These high-level reviews examine the circumstances of the case and previous involvement, if any, that the child or family had with the county department through examination of case files and interviews with persons knowledgeable of the case.

State Expenditures

Staff in the DHS and other state agencies on the review team are required to receive and review information from counties on cases involving near fatalities and egregious abuse. The review team must then post a summary report of their findings, absent confidential information, on the department's website and submit a full, confidential report to the Colorado State Child Fatality

Prevention Review Team in the Department of Public Health and Environment (DPHE).¹ Using the definitions in the bill, the DHS reports that there were 11 cases that would have been classified as near-fatalities or egregious abuse in 2010. Given this low number of cases and the fact that the structure and processes for child fatality review already exist, it is assumed that any additional workload can be accomplished within existing appropriations.

Local Government Impact

Counties will also have increased workload to report near fatalities and egregious abuse to the DHS. Given that counties currently conduct investigations and casework on reported incidents of abuse and neglect, the workload from the additional reporting is expected to be minimal. Any local government officials (sheriffs, child welfare case workers, etc.) who serve on the review team will also have additional workload to review cases, which is also assumed to be minimal, assuming 11 cases per year.

¹The Colorado State Child Fatality Prevention Review Team in the DPHE is a different committee from the review team in the DHS. The DPHE review team examines child fatalities from a broader perspective beyond child abuse and neglect, including fatalities from natural causes, injuries, motor vehicle accidents, and other factors.
