Summary of Legislation

This bill allows various law enforcement agencies to establish a program to issue photo identification to peace officers who have retired from that agency. The bill applies to the Departments of Corrections, Higher Education, Law, Public Safety, and Revenue, as well as sheriffs and police departments. In the event that the agency discontinues the program, the bill requires the agency to continue to offer photo identifications under certain conditions, such as if the peace officer requests one or if he or she retired prior to the date the program was discontinued. Agencies with programs to issue photo identification to retired peace officers may charge fees to cover the direct and indirect costs of administering the program.

State Revenue and Expenditures

This bill could increase revenue and expenditures for state agencies that elect to develop a program to issue photo identification to retired peace officers. As of this writing, no state agency has indicated plans to do so and, therefore, this fiscal note assumes any increase in revenue and expenditures will be minimal.

Local Government Impact

Similar to the state, the bill authorizes sheriffs and police departments to develop programs to issue photo identification to retired peace officers. This analysis assumes any increase in local government revenue and expenditures will be minimal.
