

Vote Yes on Amendment 50.

Help our Community Colleges without raising taxes.

This measure will provide dramatic new funding for Colorado's underfunded community colleges.

Here's how Amendment 50 works.

Voters in Colorado's three gaming towns – Cripple Creek, Black Hawk and Central City – can vote to make minor modifications in their local gaming laws. And the good news, 78 percent of new state tax revenue will go directly to Community Colleges.

It is estimated that more than $200 million could go to 16 Community Colleges in the first five years after the changes. More money for education – without raising taxes. That's why so many are getting behind Amendment 50.

More than thirty business, education and economic development organizations across Colorado have endorsed Amendment 50.

They join more than 50 business and education leaders who also back this important measure.

The Colorado Springs Gazette urges a Yes on Amendment 50, calling it "a vote that helps us all."

Help our Community Colleges. Help our local communities.

Vote Yes on Amendment 50. Real opportunities for real people.

Full-time mom. Part-time student.

Community colleges train 80% of the state's police officers, firefighters and emergency medical technicians and more than half of its new nurses and health care workers.

Community colleges offer more flexible and convenient class schedules that better serve the needs of single parents or students who have to work and go to school at the same time.

Community colleges have become increasingly attractive to students who can't afford a four-year school.

Real opportunity for real people.

Amendment 50 provides a dramatic funding increase for Colorado's community, district and junior colleges – without a tax increase. It's a big boost for schools that are engines of opportunity, serving more than 110,000 students and building stronger communities everywhere.

Vote Yes on 50. Make sure hard working Coloradans ready to help themselves have the opportunity they need.
